ABA Permanency Project

This Project helps you and your agency move children through the system into permanency and save foster care dollars.

ABA Helps with Permanency

Children in foster care need permanency quickly and safely. Children deserve to go home when it's safe -- but if they can't, then they must be provided with the most permanent home that meets their needs. The ABA Permanency Project is helping States do this for their children.

The ABA Permanency Project has been working for children for 18 years. It has proven effective, both in time and dollars. In New York State, the Project saw an average reduction in the time to achieve permanency of 15 months and saved over $15 million. Project staff brought child welfare agencies, courts, attorneys and stakeholders together and worked toward ending barriers to permanence.

ABA Permanency Project wins national award

In 2005, the Project won the Department of Health and Human Services Adoption Excellence Award for its efforts in achieving timely permanency for children.

ABA Project at work in many states

The Permanency Project is currently in Pennsylvania and Wyoming. We have completed the project in New York and Kentucky.

HOW DOES THE PERMANENCY BARRIERS PROJECT WORK?

The Project achieves positive permanency outcomes for children in foster care through system change. An ABA Project Director visits your county monthly for two years and, using their national expertise, works with you, develops tools, and delivers lasting solutions.

The ABA's Permanency Project has a proven recipe for success. The Project helps each site go through 5 major tasks:

Identifying and analyzing delays

Through case reviews and interviews with stakeholders, the Project identifies and examines each step in the life of a case and analyzes possible causes for delay.

Interactively developing recommendations and implementing reforms

Once problems are identified, a local multidisciplinary advisory board meets regularly to examine the delays and propose potential reforms. Project staff design action plans and help the county start making recommended changes. Everyone in the system must work together to get changes and reforms accepted in the field.

Establishing written protocols, procedures and providing multidisciplinary training

These typically include topics such as:

- Identifying, locating and providing outreach to missing parents and relatives
- Addressing increases in adolescent population
- Preparing written procedures
- Front-loading services
- Implementing concurrent planning
- Decreasing delays in court procedures

Monitoring reforms and changes

Change is difficult for large systems. Making sure that proposed reforms are actually implemented is crucial. Project staff work with counties to ensure progress and address any resistance.

Sharing Project results

The Project helps develop an informal county network to share common challenges, solutions, and other actions throughout the state. Sharing results by telling advocates, affiliated professionals and the larger community what the Project is doing is another key component of success.

By bringing stakeholders in the system together -- without laying blame -- the local child welfare community can examine problems and develop solutions. Since everyone has input, everyone can make change part of their practice.

Common topics include:

- improving court and agency relationships,
- streamlining the legal process, and
- providing state-specific legal training to all child welfare stakeholders.

THE PERMANENCY BARRIERS PROJECT: SUCCESSFUL FOR 19 YEARS

The Project has worked in over 30 small, medium and large locations, urban and rural, throughout the United States. It continues working in new locations every year.

Experienced attorneys lead the way

Adding years of expertise, Project staff has more than 165 years of experience in the child welfare system. Staff expertise includes agency, parent and children's attorneys, a retired dependency court judge, a child welfare policy analyst, a teacher, and a residential care social worker. Project staff specialize in helping counties find children the permanency they need. Put the Permanency Project to work in your state.
